Kenzie is Crowned!!

April 4, 2014 proved to be quite a magnificent night for Islands High School students – one young teenage girl in particular. It was here on this night that senior Kenzie Hancock who has Down Syndrome was coronated as the 2014 Prom Queen. The smile on her face and the gleam in her eyes could be seen from a mile away, and any student present at the event would have struggled to keep from showing their satisfaction with the results of the voting. It would become a night that Kenzie will never be able to forget for the remainder of her years.

Kenzie's winning of the prom queen title, by a landslide I might add, showed immense support and unity on the part of her fellow Islands High classmates. Coming together and making her dream come true was only a sample of what the sharks could do when they assembled together for a purpose. Thanks to them, Kenzie will be able to leave high school with one of the most desired and beloved titles a girl could ever wish for.

Editor's Notes

This edition of Parent Advisor introduces Kenzie Hancock as Prom Queen of Islands High School. It also demonstrates the immense sense of camaraderie Islands High School students display towards one another regardless of individual uniqueness. This was certainly a night that Kenzie who has Down Syndrome, and her classmates will never forget. From her stunning prom gown to her infectious smile and charming personality, Kenzie exemplified why crowning her prom queen was truly fitting.

From one uplifting story to another, the Parent Advisor also highlights the success of one Armstrong intern, Micaela Bowers. Micaela, a 19-year-old graduate of Johnson High School and differently-abled young adult, has been a participant in the local program which secures competitive employment; Project SEARCH. Micaela has taken her skills learned at Project SEARCH and applied them to her internship at Armstrong's Student Union, ultimately landing her a permanent, paid position.

In addition to providing inspirational stories, this edition of the Parent Advisor will also ensure that you are well-informed about the plethora of summer activities and camps for fun, therapy and/or academic enrichment provided throughout the summer break.

We hope this Parent Advisor brings inspiration and valuable information to help in facilitating the success and well-being of each student. Wishing you a joyous and safe summer!

Sincerely,

Juliet Hardeman and Tameka Tribble

Family and Community Support

Purpose

The purpose of the Family and Community Support Program is to nurture communication and collaboration among parents and educators, ultimately leading to greater success for students with disabilities. The Savannah-Chatham County Public School System participates in this parent driven initiative, headed by the Georgia Department of Education. Through this program, the Department for Exceptional Children employs parents of children receiving special education services to advise, educate and support other families navigating through the special education process. Liaisons work with and develop collaborative partnerships among parents, educators, agency personnel and community members and provide educators and families better insight into one another's perspective. Liaisons are professional staff members of the school system who know first-hand the triumphs and disappointments of raising a child with learning, emotional and /or physical challenges.

Role of a Family and Community Liaison

- Provides information to parents on the special education process of referral, evaluation and placement.
- Provides accurate information through system educators and programs about rights and responsibilities under the IDEA Act.
- Assists parents in preparing for Individualized Education Program (IEP) meetings to enable them to be active members of the team.
- Directs parents to resources available within and outside the school system.
- Provides training for parents, educators and community members on requested topics. Parent training can be individual or through workshops in the community.
- Provides feedback to the school system regarding areas that are of concern to parents.

Services provided through

- Parent Training Workshops (individual ,schools, or community)
- One-on-one meetings
- Informational parent publications (newsletter, brochures, resource guide)
- Community forums and events
- Network of supportive parents

Real opportunities. Real results. Armstrong helps special-needs students get valuable work experience.

For Micaela Bowers, the opportunity to work as an intern at The Galley in Armstrong's Student Union has been a life-changing experience. Every day, this 19-year-old graduate of Johnson High School in Savannah prepares sandwiches and serves food through Project SEARCH, a local program which helps secure competitive employment for differently-abled young adults. "Everyone is very helpful and friendly," Micaela says of her experience at Armstrong. "I get to interact with students and faculty. I'm learning new stuff."

In fact, Micaela made such a positive impression on her supervisors at The Galley, she has been offered a permanent, paid position. "I'm thrilled," she says. "I'm extremely grateful for the opportunity Armstrong has given me."

Micaela is one of five Project SEARCH individuals currently interning on the Armstrong campus, in locations ranging from the IT Services office to the College of Education computer lab. Project SEARCH students gain valuable job experience through a one-year, school-to-work program designed to facilitate a seamless transition from high school to the workplace. "The goal of the program is job placement," explains JayJay Hendrix, a Project SEARCH instructor and transition specialist. "Our program is transformational. The interns enter the program as high school students and leave as working adults."

Patricia Wachholz, dean of Armstrong's College of Education, has received positive feedback about the Project SEARCH interns, who first started working on campus in the fall of 2013. "The most impressive thing about the interns is their dedication," she raves. "They are always here, always on time. They take their work very seriously and are intent on learning the skills related to the workplace. They're just a delightful group of high school students ~ very polite, very mature in their interactions with the adults on campus."

Armstrong offers undergraduate and graduate programs in Special Education and has the distinction of being the only university in Georgia with a state-approved Transition Endorsement program for practicing special educators. "It's one thing for us to teach the theory and methodology for working with special needs students and quite something else to put these ideas into practice," says Dean Wachholz. "Not too long ago, special needs individuals weren't valued as contributors in the general workforce. Today, we recognize the contributions of 'differently abled' individuals, like the students who are interning on the Armstrong campus, as not only valuable but essential to the well-being of our community."

Since its inception in 1996, Project SEARCH has grown from a single program site in Cincinnati, Ohio to more than 200 locations across the United States, Canada, Europe and Australia. The program began in Chatham County in 2006 and currently has 19 interns working at area companies and non-profit organizations. Hendrix credits Armstrong with helping expand the program and providing much-needed training space for the Project SEARCH program at University Hall. "The welcome we've received from Armstrong has been phenomenal," Hendrix says. "Armstrong is helping change the lives of these students by encouraging independence and enabling them to transition to the workplace."
